2016 Iron Hill Vineyard Sonoma Valley Zinfandel

The Iron Hill Vineyard is farmed on volcanic rock and planted in an amphitheater setting. The Cooke selection comes from a nearby vineyard that always produces wine of complexity and is very expressive and very Northern Rhône like. The vines are well stressed at the 400 ft elevation vineyard at a 55° slope with a lot of iron exposure, producing red notes in the Zinfandel.

A mysterious wine, deep black red color, with aromas of black cherry, savory, lavender, loamy, dark chocolate and hints of eucalyptus. A stunningly rich palate, that is a mirror image of the aromatics, but the dark guanaja Valrhona chocolate takes the lead with touches of black currant and roasted earth filling out the wine.

CONNOISSEURS' GUIDE TO CALIFORNIA WINE

94 Pts In fact the most refined of its maker's remarkably deep, concentrated efforts, and it rises to the top for its distinctive fruitiness and its great generosity. Make no mistake; it is a ripe wine with plenty of heft, but it also displays a nice bit of polish and, its elevated alcohol level notwithstanding, it keeps fruit and balance first and foremost. Its red and black fruits character is well-supported by a light-medium layer of tannins that will allow it to achieve early drinkability in just a few years for those who like sturdy wines yet retain ageworthiness over a half-decade or more. Sometimes, "less muscular" is simply okay. Reviewed: January 2019

92+ Pts The 2016 Zinfandel Iron Hill Vineyard offers darker style as well as notes of smoked cherries, black plums, scorched earth, and Asian spices. This beauty is rich and masculine in style, yet has solid acidity, and well as a balanced, medium to full-bodied texture. It's another brilliant wine from Cohn that's going to benefit from short term cellaring and keep for 15+ years.
